The Rev. Billy Graham was a bridge-builder, compassionate, and globally-focused. He befriended a young, teenage Leighton Ford, when the Canadian was discouraged about the meager results at an evangelistic campaign. Billy put his arm around Leighton's shoulder and said, "God has given you a burden to see people come to know Christ. If you stay humble, I believe God will use you. And I will pray for you."

Leighton went on to be mentored by and work under Billy at BGEA for three decades. And, he married Billy's younger sister, Jean. Leighton learned much through the years from Billy's life. The word that seems to capture them both is "attentive." They spent their lives seeking to be attentive to the Lord and paying attention to the people God brought into their lives.

Today, we can become attentive in our world as family members, friends, leaders, and servants. How can we apply timeless truths from the lives of these evangelists — into a 21st century context deeply needing connections, bridge-builders, and attentive believers?

Jean Graham Ford spent her life listening to people and making them feel really seen. We will introduce Jeanie's Vision on March 22 — a new ministry to help raise up and mentor a new generation of evangelists.
